

MEETINGS & PRESENTATIONS

... create a better impression

Typically, a German-style meeting is well-prepared with an agenda which has been read by all participants before the meeting starts. This is typical for a task-oriented culture where 'time is money': the structure is clear and the goals are well-defined. In relationship-oriented cultures, however, the idea of a 'meeting' is to meet to discuss an ongoing problem, task or project.

Presentations in English are often stressful if you don't have experience in presenting in English. But with the right training and preparation, you can give a successful presentation and make a self-confident impression!
