STEERING DIVERSITY

... create a better leadership

The alpha wolves lead the pack and bond the different pack members together. The success of a wolf pack depends on team work. It is an interchange between acting and re-acting

The Musher selects his sled dogs according to their individual abilities. Sled dogs give their best in order to secure success.

Orcas 'invest' 15 years in the training of their young.

In this workshop you will analyse the Critical Success Factors of these animals and transfer them to your own management style.

A qualified animal behavioural psychologist, Joan von Ehren has observed the behaviour of wolves in the Kaparten Mountains, Rumania and spent weeks dog-sledding in Sweden. This hands-on experience together with in-depth reading of the behaviour of dolphins, orcas and wales has created a practical inter-connectivity to the behaviour of the managers with whom she has worked intensively over the past two decades. There are many lessons to be learned. In this seminar you will have the possibility to compare your own management style with that of the animal kingdom.
